BELOVED INTERACTIVE FANTASY SERIES ENDLESS QUEST RETURNS, UPDATED FOR TODAY'S KIDS

(Renton, Wash.) - Mirrorstone™ Books is bringing back "Endless Quest," the interactive series that sold over five million copies when it was first published more than 20 years ago. With "Endless Quest," readers ages 8 to 12 become heroes in their own fantasy quest. Book 1, Claw of the Dragon (January 2008), and Book 2, Search for the Pegasus (July 2008), are the first new installments in this series that enables the reader to take charge of the fast-moving plot by choosing which action to take at critical points in the story.

A new generation of readers will find that the dragons, wizards, and imaginary worlds are just as exciting as they were in the "Endless Quest" books their parents may have read, but the new series has a modern sensibility. The protagonists are gender-neutral, so boys and girls can identify equally well with the main characters. The illustrations and writing style are also in keeping with contemporary taste.

Mirrorstone is reintroducing the "Endless Quest" books because they are a favorite of both reluctant and enthusiastic readers. It's "literature that by its nature holds a reader by the throat and doesn't let go," according to English Journal, a publication of the National Council of Teachers of English.

"Children who love to read are intrigued by 'Endless Quest' because they can take an active role in the adventure. We also expect the books to appeal to kids who like video games," notes Mirrorstone Senior Editor Nina Hess. "The text mimics the gaming environment by allowing the reader to control the action. Because of the many different combinations, the books are likely to be read more than once, which is a great way to reinforce new vocabulary and build fluency," she says.
